DEALING OUT JUSTICE.

Some of the street talk upon the disposition of the rebels has been rabid. Men who have observed affairs in Hawaii for any length of time have learned that street talk amounts to very little here. It is not public sentiment. It does not settle issues. National and local policies are shaped by men who consider quietly at appointed places. At these gatherings prejudice and rumor and animosity are left outside. Justice and judgement converge to a verdict point upon which the responsible agents of the people are willing to stake the interests of all. And by the way, THE STAR is the first to publicly suggest justice in connection with the settlement of the uprising. Strange that the critics of curbs and the pell-mell publications have not thought of it. We had supposed from the first that the purpose was to base the ultimate conclusions upon the principles of justice. Any other course would be a mistake. This has been done. The final findings stand out boldly in the broad light as examples of the highest and noblest inceptions of that justice for which honest men battle the world over. THE STAR unlike the Advertiser, does not deem it necessary to appeal to the supporters of the Government to be "satisfied." No one was looking for "satisfaction." Everybody wanted justice and there is no question among those capable of understanding justice but what it has been meted out in the most even-handed fashion.

That there can be reasonable difference of opinion as to individual cases is very natural. In fact we were this not so there would be painfully evident a lack of interest on the part of supporters of the Republic. Few of the men who served in the field can suppress contempt for Nowlin and Clarke or hatred for Bertelmann. Yet it is clear that these men earned their reward. Being exactly just, the sentences will add to the stability of the Republic and to its excellent reputation abroad.

The community upholds President Dole and the Cabinet and the world will say that the Government of Hawaii is wise and humane and just. Whether or no the fair method of dealing with revolutionists will put an end to treason and plotting, only the developments of two or three years will show. The heads of the Government assert by their acts their belief in its strength and permanency. The people express their views through the men at the helm.

A word about the Military Commission will not be out of place here. It made findings upon the law and the facts regardless of persons. It did its full duty. It presented proper verdicts to the reviewing authority with confidence that the Commander-in-Chief would exercise his prerogatives so that the ends of justice might be served.

THE STAR only hopes now that the factions of the country will reach an understanding and that peace and good feeling may obtain.

IN THE very live issue of the loaves and fishes there should be the most searching discussion. There is no question about the rights of the rank and file in these premises.

THOSE people at home and abroad who have been hoping that the Republic would involve itself in international complications are doomed to disappointment.

WE APPREHEND that it is the purpose of the movement against "neutral" officeholders to retain in place faithful men and to secure the dismissal of those who falter in loyalty to the Republic. The policy seems reasonable.

For about ten minutes Saturday it was a question whether Frank Honeck would return by the pilot boat or continue to San Francisco. He at first refused to pay his fare. Honeck claimed that as the Government had caused him to leave it should settle for his passage. The purser was about to send the man over the side when he "pungled up."

Timely Topics.

It is evident to people who go through the coffee district in Kona that the industry is destined to become a large one and an important item in the commerce of Hawaii. Thus far the blight has been nothing that the growers cannot handle successfully so that loss to crop through that source is infinitesimal. The acreage is being constantly increased and will do so with greater rapidity as soon as the Government can see its way clear to improve the old roads and build new ones. You cannot expect building to go ahead boom-like until the facilities for getting lumber on the land are better. Just now, owing to the fact that in some parts of the district there are but trails from the boat landings to the upland, it costs $10 per thousand to haul the lumber a distance of three miles. It may be worth that price now but when better roads are provided the price will have to be reduced. It seems, to "Veritas," "Old Subscriber" and "A taxpayer" that it is to the interest of the transportation companies to push the building of roads in Kona to the utmost of their influence because they are directly effected. With a sort of epidemic in building on any of the other islands they would profit by the increased amount of lumber shipped.

Our stock of fence wire includes nearly all sizes of both black and galvanized. The quality is superior plain and barbed in every respect to that sold in most stores here and will stand the wear and tear of this climate a great deal better than the average imported to these islands. In quantity we have far, and away the largest stock on the Islands and we will be pleased to receive orders and will fill them at very low prices.

Some very handsome hanging lamps in black wrought iron and polished metals should have your attention this week. These are entirely new patterns and are decidedly the handsomest we have ever offered. They have the celebrated "B & H" burners with all the latest improvements. No bother about taking off the chimney when you go to light the wick, the patent arrangement obviates the difficulty.

We have a good stock of the celebrated Bath Tub Enamel Paint made expressly for transforming old zinc lined tubs into something that looks just like a high priced porcelain lined one. If you buy this paint and use it according to the directions on the container you will have a very clean nice bath tub at an expense of a dollar and a half.

By way of a delicacy why don't you try a hot waffle and a bit of fried chicken for breakfast or tea. The waffles are no more trouble to bake than hot cakes if you have one of our waffle irons. We sell them at a price that won't interfere with your having one if you like waffles. We can supply you with chickens but we can sell you a Pansy stove that will cook just a little better than any stove you ever saw. We have them in three sizes, 6, 7, 8, and we sell them at $15, $20 and $25. We've never seen a better stove for the money anywhere and we doubt very much if you have.

Hendry's Ready Mixed Paints are growing in favor every day; people who try them recommend them to their friends so that the demand is growing larger at all times. We have all shades necessary for either inside or outside work and we furnish you cards with colors lithographed on them and with figures and measurements that will enable you to ascertain just what a job will cost you before you begin work. If you contemplate doing any painting it will pay you to use these paints.

A few more fruit pickers left for you if you have fruit trees in your yard and want to save the product. There is nothing better in the market for mangoes than this little article and all it cost you is a half a dollar—Try one of them.

THANKS TO RETURN.

Once the letters began to arrive from America we were all much happier, for we knew that our friends were well and to know what was happening. He was fairly well and in good spirits and making friends and making money. I remember his writing home on one occasion and asking us to send him out a couple of new stomachs, so hospitable was his friends over the water, so numerous the dinners and suppers to which he was invited. When the long summer and winter were over and the still longer spring, one day we heard that he was coming back, much sooner than he expected. I believe he saw a steamer starting for home and could stand it no longer, and then there came off.

I can still remember sitting with my grandparents, expecting his return. My sister and I sat on the red sofa in the little study, and shortly before the time we had calculated that he might arrive came a little ring at the front door bell. My grandmother broke down; my sister and I rushed to the front door, only we were so afraid that it might not be he that we did not dare to open it, and there we stood until a second and much longer ringing brought us to our senses. "Why didn't you open the door?" said my father, stepping in, looking veiled and sad and bright, laughing. In a moment he had never been away at all. — Annie Kitchen in Lowman's Magazine.

Fresh Air Prohibited.

Many are the stories told of the great reverence in which the Scotch people hold the Sabbath. Their methods of showing their reverence, however, are sometimes so remarkable as to draw a smile from others, who may nevertheless be reasonably strict observers of the "day of rest."

A minister of the kirk told an American clergyman who was traveling in Scotland that on one occasion he passed a Sunday in a little country inn, and as the tiny parlor of the house was exceedingly close and stuffy and the day was warm he started to open one of the windows.

"What are you about, man?" inquired the landlady, with much severity, entering the room just in time to prevent the carrying out of the minister's design.

He meekly explained that he had thought it would be pleasant to have a little fresh air.

"Eh, man!" said the landlady, with additional emphasis and severity, "ye can hae no fresh air in this house on the Sabbath. Six days are enow for that, mon!" — Youth's Companion.

THAT FATAL DUET.

He said the Wrong Thing, and It Almost Made Her Fatal.

"Oh, dear," cried the girl with the white gloves, "I am so hungry that I really must have a cream soda."

"So am I," said the girl with tremendous sleeves, "I always take something solid about 11."

"So do I, but such an awful thing happened at the musicale last night that it's a wonder I've any appetite at all."

"Do tell me all about it?" cried the girl with the tremendous sleeves as she tasted her soda. "I haven't known you long, but ever since you gave me that lovely cure for snoring and introduced me to your Cousin Tom I've felt as though we had been friends for ages."

"Yes, indeed, and as soon as I found that you were living next door to Frank I knew that we were meant to be bosom friends."

"But do tell me what happened at the musicale. Couldn't you keep any powder on your face, or did the heat take all the curl out of your hair?"

"Worse even than that. I'll tell you all about it. You remember that I told you that young Narcissus was inclined to be quite attentive, and as he has so much money I felt it my duty to encourage him, just to keep him out of mischief."

"What a noble girl you are!"

"I always try to do my duty," said the girl with the white gloves, "though my efforts are not always appreciated. Why, for six months I allowed poor Aleck to be as devoted as he liked just because he was so much in love with me, and after all the mean thing wasn't satisfied and said I led him on. The idea!"

"How ungrateful! But do tell me about the musicale."

"Well, in the first place I couldn't wear my smartest gown because I was asked to sing a duet with Ida—you see it is so tight that I can't get my breath in it, much less my voice."

"What a pity!"

"Wasn't it? But of course I wanted to sing. Our voices don't harmonize very well, but our complexions do. Well, Mr. Narcissus was there and was quite attentive during the early part of the evening. He would have been more so but for Jennie. It was really shocking the way she ran after him. Why, when I asked him to get me some claret cup, meaning to get him away from her, she actually went with him to get it. I do hate maneuvering, don't you?"

"Indeed I do. I—"

"Yes, and the very first chance I got I gave him a hint that, while she was my dearest friend, she was awfully mercenary, though not as ill tempered as dear Helen, to whom he had asked to be introduced. I left it to my duty."

"Of course, you—"

"Well, I told him that the heat made me faint, so we went into the conservatory and, don't you think, just as I had got the conversation into the proper channels that scheming Jennie came after me with Ida's brooch. To say that it was time for the duet. And she actually had the impudence to suggest to Mr. Narcissus that they stay there where it was cool and listen, when the music room faced the lake and was deliciously cool."

"The little wretch! Why—"

"Yes, indeed, and when I went in I found she had come for me 15 minutes too soon, for they had just begun to look for Ida's music and the accompanist had her gloves and rings to take off. Well, I was so angry that I could scarcely see the notes, for I was afraid Jennie would talk all the while she couldn't hear."

"But he came to congratulate you?"

"Oh, yes, and that was the worst part of the whole affair. I smiled and said, 'Oh, I don't believe you heard it at all—you were so absorbed with Jennie.' Of course I didn't mean it, but I wanted him to deny it so I could tell her."

"Of course. What did he say?"

"Oh, it was awful. He flushed up and said, 'Oh, yes, I heard it all, and it would have been lovely if you had only a good contralto to sing with you.' Oh, I thought I should die."

"But what was wrong? I—"

"Oh, nothing, only I was the contralto, that was all." — Chicago Tribune.

A Loser.

"Sir, the charge will be half a crown, if I am to tell you everything."

"Here is the money. Now, as a guarantee for the future, tell me a little of my past history."

"Nothing easier. You have been unhappy in wedlock."

"I never was married."

"You have had false friends."

"All my friends have remained true to this day."

"I may be mistaken. You have traveled far and wide."

"I have never been any farther than the next village."

"Come, let me see your hand. I shall be able to read more clearly. Now I have it. You have lost money recently."

"Quite correct. I lost that half crown I gave you just now." — Tribune.
